Live product cockpit

Speaker Notes

Open with a simple acquisition thesis: this is not an idea, it is a working product and a market-ready asset.

The buyer is not purchasing a blank sheet; they are buying time, traction, and a clearer path to revenue.

Keep the tone strategic and commercial from the first sentence.

Why the market still hurts

SMEs still lose time and control by running HR in spreadsheets and disconnected tools.

The pain is not only feature gaps; it is operational friction.

- Manual approvals create delays
- Fragmented tools create errors
- Global products often miss local language and workflow needs

fit matters

People operations at a glance

Speaker Notes

Make the problem concrete: the buyer is not escaping a lack of software, but a lack of fit and simplicity.

This slide should feel familiar to anyone managing headcount, approvals, and reporting manually.

Do not over-explain the product yet; stay on pain and urgency.

What you are buying

The product is already real, visible, and structured for daily operations.

The buyer receives a functioning base that can be branded, extended, or integrated.

- Core HR workflows are productized
- Billing and subscription logic are in place
- Screens prove the product breadth

Speaker Notes

Use the screenshots as proof of execution, not as a technical walkthrough.

Keep pointing back to the fact that the buyer is acquiring a working base, not a promise.

This is the strongest anti-risk slide in the deck.

Breadth across the employee lifecycle

CADRO covers operations from onboarding to performance and support.

The value is not one module. It is platform footprint.

- Time and attendance
- Leave approval
- Performance and talent
- Knowledge, requests, and support

Speaker Notes

This slide widens the commercial narrative: the buyer is not purchasing a niche tool, but a platform with room to expand.

Show that the product touches multiple operational teams, which increases stickiness and monetization potential.

Do not describe internal wiring; focus on breadth and business value.

Already live, already searchable

cadro.io is live in production and already exposes public product content.

The website is an existing marketing and acquisition asset, not a placeholder.

- Live public pages are already published
- Content architecture is SEO-friendly and modular
- The glossary / content layer can expand to new countries quickly
- Localization changes content depth, not the core product base

Speaker Notes

Say the site is live and the content system is already doing commercial work.

Avoid claiming a numeric SEO score unless you have an external audit; instead emphasize SEO-ready architecture and live public pages.

Highlight how localization can expand into more countries without rewriting the core product.

The revenue engine is already modeled

The buyer gets a pricing system, ROI logic, and a clear path to payback.

The commercial model is subscription-based with expansion paths.

- BASIC / PRO / ENTERPRISE pricing
- Upsell paths for payroll, AI, and integrations
- 25K USD increment ROI model already prepared

ROI snapshot	Value	Meaning
Base scenario	~10.2 months	Balanced operating case
Conservative scenario	~18.4 months	Lower sales efficiency case
Aggressive scenario	~5.2 months	Strong execution / upsell case
Strategy	Revenue scale-up	Buy or back a growth engine

Speaker Notes

Use the ROI slide to show that the buyer is not only purchasing product capability but a measurable commercial engine.

The goal is confidence, not hype: the model should feel disciplined and realistic.

Anchor on the base case, then show the upside band.

External deck, protected core

The presentation is intentionally redacted to protect implementation IP and licensing value.

This deck is designed for buyer evaluation without exposing source-level detail.

- No endpoint inventory
- No source-level implementation map
- No deployment coordinates or secrets
- Controlled due diligence can follow under NDA

What is shared	What remains private
Product value proposition	Source code and internal wiring
Commercial model	Operational hardening details
Live UI proof	Service map and internal controls
Buyer next step	NDA-based technical deep dive

Speaker Notes

This slide reassures the buyer that the deck is safe to circulate while preserving strategic IP.

Frame the redaction as a professional diligence boundary, not as a lack of substance.

Offer a deeper NDA-based session if the buyer moves forward.

Why this should be in the market now

The buyer gains a platform that can expand by language, content, and country without starting over.

The opportunity is not just software; it is regional reach.

- Multilingual support creates a regional advantage
- Glossary / dictionary structure can be extended quickly
- Adding countries is a content-and-localization exercise, not a rebuild
- The buyer can accelerate growth instead of bootstrapping from scratch

Speaker Notes

This is the market-expansion slide: language is not a cosmetic feature; it is a growth multiplier.

The buyer should understand that adding countries is much cheaper when the localization structure already exists.

The line to remember is: content scales; core product stays intact.

How the deal can be structured

Keep the commercial path flexible while preserving the buyer’s ability to own or control the asset.

Possible structures can include full acquisition, exclusive license, or a strategic partnership with white-label potential.

- Full acquisition if strategic fit is clear
- Exclusive license if the buyer wants control without immediate transfer
- Partnership / white-label if they want to test the market first

Structure option	Buyer benefit
Full acquisition	Complete ownership and strategic control
Exclusive license	Control of commercialization with lower upfront commitment
Strategic partnership	Test market fit before a broader commitment

Speaker Notes

Be explicit that the buyer can buy the company / program outright if they want full ownership.

If they are not ready for full ownership, offer flexible commercialization structures.

This slide reduces friction by making the transaction feel adaptable rather than forced.

The takeaway

CADRO is a ready-to-scale HR platform with live product proof, market presence, and commercial upside.

The buyer gets speed, focus, and reduced execution risk.

Next step: review the data room, validate the commercial model, and discuss structure.

Speaker Notes

Close by repeating the acquisition thesis: they are buying speed, control, and a de-risked base.

End with a clear next step rather than a long recap.

The tone should feel like a strategic purchase discussion, not a product demo.
